From the log of the United States brig "Dolphin."

Harigault Rock, latitude 40 deg. 58 min. north, longitude 48 deg. 40 min. west. October 9, 1852. The Dolphin saw nothing of the danger. October 10, latitude 41 deg. 54 min. north, longitude 56 deg. 19 min. west, saw a small whale, which locked something like a rock. No doubt all the discoveries of rocks hereabouts have been ice-barge or whales, as I notice the date of discoveries corresponds with the iceberg season exactly.

Darailis Rock, latitude 40 deg. 52 min. north, longitude 54 deg. 42 min. west. October 11, 1842. No appearance of this rock; seanded about its position, and got bottom at the depth of 3,450 fathoms.

Herragault breakers, latitude 41 deg. 07 min. north, longitude 49 deg. 23 min. west. October 20, 1852, sounded with 4,580 fathoms up and down, (near the position of Herragault's breakers.) No appearance of either shoals or rocks.

Thirty-five fathom shoal, latitude 42 deg. 32 min. north, longitude 45 deg. 17 min. west, and latitude 44 deg. 37 minutes north, longitude 40 deg. 28 min. west. October 23, sounded and got bottom with 2,700 fathoms line up and down. No indication of soundings.

Jean Hammond's Rock, latitude 36 deg. 56 min. north, longitude 19 deg. 50 min. west. January 5 to 12, 1853, does not exist. Sounded 2,350 fathoms, (bottom.) No indications of shoat water.

Rock, latitude 30 deg. 50 min. north, longitude 27 deg. 19 min. west. January 29, 1853, no bottom at 2200 fathoms, January 30, latitude 30 deg. 44 min. north, long, ude 27 deg. 21 min. west, passed over a reported vigia. No appearance of shoal water.

It is to be regretted that circumstances did not permit him to remove every doubt with regard to the existence and place of all of those dangers.

nant Berryman has also performed the most acceptable service of running two lines of deep sea soundings across the Atlantic. The results give plausibility to the conjecture that the north Atlantic ocean is proba-bly nowhere much more than 5,000 fathoms (30,000

From the National Democrat.

This is a fast age. We live at locomotive speed. A century of life is crowded into a year. The last seventy years almost equal, in rapid development of the race, any previous thousand years of the world's history. A distinguished writer in the cause of liberty in the revolution, when surveying our country's future, then attempted to be choked to death by the red band of British monarchy, said, in effect, "never since the time of Noah hath a people been piaced in our position. The future is in our hands, and we have to begin the business or a world anew." Nobly has our country fulfilled this saying of the prophetic writer of the revolution. Let 1775 and 1853 stand face to face for a moment, and the world will be struck dumb by the miracle of contrast which they present. Or, to bring the matter home more palpably, suppose Washington risen from his grave for a little of great part of the prophetic writers of the revolutions. The longitude of Scarboro harbor depends on 30 moon calminations, compared with corresponding observations and reproduct of the prophetic writers of the revolutions. What a contrast to the days of 1776 would meet the gaze of the great man! In 1776 the United States consisted of thirteen colonies, pent up between the Alleghanies and the Atlantic, with a population of barely three millions, struggling for lite itself against the most powerful, the most brutal monarchy of the age. In 1853 the United States consists of thirty-one great republics, cemented in indissoluble union, with a population of twenty-five millions; her vast territory fronts alike towards the rising and the setting sun—the Atlantic and the Pacific are her easiern and western boundaries, and as to northern and southern boundaries, they are not settled yel—by no means finished; Destiny will take care of them. Washington risen from his tomb, and surveying the land from its topmost beight, need not let his vision be checked by either Niagara Falls or the Gulf of Mexico: there is a great deal of United States jet to come, beyond gulf and existingt. We can imagine the stare of wonder which would light up his hearty, good-humored face. In his day one John Fitch, amid the unextinguishable laughter of a crowd of merchants and other respectable people assembled on a Philadelphia wharf, tried the experiment of propelling a boat by the force of steam. In his day also Oliver Evans, another madman of the Fitch atamp, amid the pity of contempt of all men of common sense, tried

The last steamer brought the news of the death of the celebrated toxicologist, Orūla. His position in the scientific world was so high that a short sketch of his life-which we abridge from the Courrier des Etats Unis, will be found interesting:

Mathew Joseph Orfila was born at Port Mahon, in the island of Minorca, in 1683. His father was a merchantIn 1802 he embarked on a coasting voyage in the Mediterranean, and remained a sailor until 1805, when he is a standard of the sea, came to Valencia, studied addenly abandoned the sea, came to Valencia, studied nedicine, and carried off the first prize in chemistry.

Indeed, his reputation was so'promising that the Junta of Barcelona resolved to send him to Paris to pursue his studies at their expense. He reached there in 1807-Ten months afterwards the war between France and Spain broke out, and his pension ceased. He was enabled, however, by the assistance of a relative, to continue his scientific course.

As soon as he had obtained the diploma of doctor, he pened a school of chemistry, which soon became celebrated. Among his pupils were Jules Cloquet and Edwards, both afterwards distinguished men.

In 1816 Orfila received a medical appointment from Louis XVIII. In 1819 he was naturalized in France, and soon after was called to the chair of medical juris-prudence, at the Faculté de Mediciae, which he occupied until 1823, when he took the professorship of chemistry. Already, in 1820, he had been elected member of the leadémie de Medecine.

The revolution of 1830 opened a new career of disction to Orfila. He was made Dean of the Faculté member of the General Council of Hospitals; member of the Departmental Council; then member of the Royal Council, and commander of the Legion of Honor.

Orfila's opinion was of the greatest weight with the criminal courts in all cases of medical jarisprudence, and particularly in poisoning cases. Our readers will recollect the important part he played in the La Farge and Peytel cases. Toxicology was his peculiar branch. His treatise on general toxicology, published in 1812, was the commencement of his scientific reputation. Everything he has since published treats either of this subject, or of medical and chemical jurisprudence. The best known of his works are the Elements de Médecine légale, in three volumes, published in 1816; Lecons de Médecine légale, in three volumes, published in 1820; Exhumations juridiques, in two volumes-a treatise on the examination of bodies disinterred by order of a court of justice. Besides these, he has communicated a great number of
